Mindy Kaling Your Snaps

You toted your June issues around town, took a few pics, then shared them on Instagram using #Mindy InStyle. Our cover girl followed all the action and chose her five faves from the bunch. The lucky winners scored a copy of InStyle signed by Dr. Lahiri herself. Here's what these stellar grammers had to say.

@cvoonthego "Why is everyone hanging out without us!? #girlishilar #mindykaling #themindyproject"

@maddiefierce21 "I had WAY too much fun creating a #crossstitch version of #instyle's #June cover!"

@kiannak23 "On my way to Book Con at the crack of dawn for the one and only @mindykaling"

@jgoska "Look at these wrists! Look how dainty they are! They can barely hold up this copy of @instylemagazine"

@thesailortaylor "I'm adorable. I look like Keira Knightley running errands. #boxedwater"

ELIZABETH BANKS TOOK US BEHIND THE SCENES

INSTYLE.COM What's it like to spend a day with the funny lady who directed Pitch Perfect 2? Pretty, well, funny. We tagged along as Banks documented a hilarious stop at The Ellen DeGeneres Show and cracked jokes backstage at Jimmy Kimmel Live. INSIDE InStyle EDITOR'S NOTE

Inside Story

There may never be a single definition of beauty—and that is a good thing. But we can all agree that without internal beauty, external beauty doesn't amount to much. Perhaps that's why we see designers returning time and again to the sheer trend, metaphorically employing tricks that allow us to play peekaboo or give the illusion of seeing right through garments to the woman herself. Truth be told, of course, it's one's actions that are most revelatory—when someone lays herself truly bare. And this is why, with or without all her endorsements, magazine covers, and flawless red-carpet moments, Eva Longoria always tops our list of "Most Beautiful." We found ourselves absolutely breathless catching up with the indefatigable actress in "Into the Deep" (p. 167) as we learned exactly how she has been using her brandname recognition to strengthen and deepen her platform for human rights advocacy. What fuels Longoria is not vanity or fame but rather empathy, a sense of justice, and intellectual curiosity. Now, isn't that gorgeous?

At the Cover Shoot

WHO Eva Longoria WHERE A private estate and beach in Oyster Bay, N.Y.—you might remember it from Lana Del Rey's "National Anthem" music video WHAT WENT DOWN The star arrived cozy and cute in a Luca Bruno sweater, a Helmut Lang T, and sweats that said "Smile and Love the Cowboys," a reference to her favorite football team. (She's from Texas, after all.)

CHAIN REACTION

You Asked, Eva Answered

What is the best part about growing older?

-SHALAYNE PULIA, Chicago

The evolution of your wisdom from the lessons you've learned. I wish I had my 20-year-old body, but I do love my 40-year-old mind!

ONE KNIT WONDER

"This sweater is so warm, I didn't want to take it off," said Longoria, who braved a chilly beach breeze in the plushy pullover. Alpaca pullover, Nili Lotan, $415; nililotan.com.

MOOD MUSIC

One of the things that tickled us? Longoria has a penchant for mid-'80s tunes. To get into the modeling mood, she blared these upbeat tracks but later switched to her "chillin" playlist, which included Atlantic Starr's "Secret Lovers."

She sang along to "Your Love," the Outfield.

Behind the Scenes

Exactly what went into making our fall preview feature with Trainwreck star Brie Larson

WHAT I DID

Florals for spring are nothing new, but going super-bold with them is. I tested out the big-bloom trend [May's The Look: Miracle Grow] with this off-theshoulder dress for a friend's beachfront wedding. My bright pink lipstick and envelope clutch complemented the oversize flowers, and neutral sandals kept the ensemble relaxed.

5Bags You'll Obsess Over All Season

Ever since we spotted these gorgeous pieces of arm candy on the runways, we've been fantasizing about how they'd look over our shoulders. And now that they're about to hit stores, we've created a cheat sheet to fall's most coveted styles, complete with details on how you can score them before they fly off the shelves

Chanel Mosaic

WHY IT'S HOT Karl Lagerfeld recreated a gigantic French brasserie in the Grand Palais to stage March's Chanel show, which embodied, he said, an "idealized version of today's Paris." The collection was the talk of tout Paris—especially this bag, whose tiles, crafted by the Maison Lesage, mimic the setting's floors.

CHANCES OF GETTING ONE Since private clients reserve these collector's items before they even land on the sales floor, your best bet, says our insider sleuth, is to befriend a salesperson at a less-trafficked locale, like a boutique within a department store.

Mosaic embroidery and metal, Chanel, $9,000; at select Chanel boutiques.

CLOTT

The Saint Laurent College Monogram

WHY IT'S HOT The 2013 Monogram collection, a series of bags showcasing Cassandre's classic logo, was one of creative director Hedi Slimane's biggest smashes. This season he adds a tophandle cross-body to the line, and for the first time it's slouchy and features silver hardware.

CHANCES OF GETTING ONE

Solid. This shape will be a new cornerstone of the line.

Mansur Gavriel's No. Lady Bag WHY IT'S HOT Thank Rachel Mansur and Floriana Gavriel for last year's bucket-bag craze. This season the duo is betting that the addition of a smaller strap will incite similar fervor. "İt's ladylike and cool," says Mansur. CHANCES OF GETTING ONE Pink, our favorite hue, might go quickly, but don't sweat it: There are 26 colors total in two leathers.

a best seller because of its visible interior pocket. Now the pocket is stepping out solo as a clutch. Brava!

CHANCES OF GETTING ONE Don't wait: The calf-hair clutch is available only in limited quantities, and most can be found at Fendi's Madison Avenue flagship store. Call to reserve yours.

Louis Vuitton's Twist

WHY IT'S HOT After more than 115 years, the iconic LV logo got a makeover (in a modern sans serif), and it's driving Hollywood wild. Miranda Kerr and Brie Larson have sported the denim-inspired fold-over, as has Beyoncé, who wore it to meet the Duchess of Cambridge.

CHANCES OF GETTING ONE Good, and now that it's a hit with stars, LV is offering more options, like an emerald croc-embossed version.

Epi leather, Louis Vuitton, $3,950; at select Louis Vuitton stores.

Who's That Gal?

We won't see GAL GADOT as the updated Wonder Woman until next year, but the Israeli actress is already proving her kickass skills in the Fast & Furious films, the upcoming crime drama Triple 9, and a new commercial for Gucci's sandalwood-infused scent, Bamboo. Here, she recalls how events in her life have helped her nail each scene in the 40-second spot.

Always Been Racy

"Having been in the Fast & Furious franchise, I came prepared and I knew how to drive a stick. The best car Lever steered was an Aston Martin DB5, like the one Sean Connery drove as James Bond. It was elegant, sexy, and had so much character."

when I was younger came in handy for this scene. Also, wearing nothing felt like a celebration of femininity. I love the idea of seeing a woman be so free.'

> Gadot's public display of body confidence began when she won Miss Israel in 2004.

She's a Thrill-Seeking Mama

"I do a lot of sword work and martial arts in Wonder Woman. I enjoy anything that gets my adrenaline going. In Israel I was a gym instructor in the army. Now that I'm a mother, I still enjoy it, but I like to make sure I'm safe."

"In roles like Wonder Woman, I feel so grateful to have the chance to show a powerful, confident woman.

She's Part of the Bevhive

"I was a dancer for 12 years. For this spot we did some tango. But if you really want me on the dance floor, play Beyoncé's 'Single Ladies,' 'Run the World (Girls),' or 'Diva.'"

SUPER SCENTS

Comics's multiverse to front a fragrance campaign. In fact, judging from these three fellow crusaders (and one life partner), supersexy pheromones are the secret weapons of superheroes.

CATWOMAN Halle Berry launched seven fragrances with Coty, starting in 2009.

SUPERMAN Henry Cavill for Dunhill London, 2008.

LOIS LANE Amv Adams for Eau de Lacoste, 2013.

GREEN LANTERN Ryan Reynolds for Boss Bottled by Hugo Boss, 2013.

Melissa's DREAM ESTR

After dropping out of the Fashion Institute of Technology to pursue a career in comedy, Melissa McCarthy returns to her love of design with Melissa McCarthy Seven7, her own collection for women of all sizes.

Q You've wanted your own line since high school. How does this represent who you are?

A I want to make the clothes that I couldn't find, especially for plus sizes. I did not want the typical "make things bigger, make things drapier" approach. I wanted to make things cooler.

Q How do you describe your style?

A Eclectic. I dress for my mood. You can feel sexy or sporty or edgy, and the fun of it is that you don't have to pick. Fashion is not supposed to be a uniform, or else we'd all be wearing smocks.

Q Do you have any fashion don'ts?

A No. I have two young daughters, so I don't like anything that tears women down. If you want to wear a hot pink tutu and Dr. Martens, I am the first person to say I love it. That's true too as a designer. I want to make comfy jeans that have studs all over the sides. Because why not?

Q What's the inspiration behind your patterns?

A Somehow, someone's put it out there that you should only wear solids at a certain point in your life. That's crazy. I adore prints. The more you mix, the more interesting it gets.

Q What's the secret to having fun in life?

A Don't beat yourself up. If we could project five years ahead, we would look at the things we worry about now and think, Ugh! What was the big deal?

Woman's Best Friend

When it comes to animal rights, Emmy Rossum, star of Shameless and tireless champion of the Best Friends Animal Society, is as fiercely protective as the mother hen she plays on television mmy Rossum's Los Angeles home is full of happy barks and purrs. The actress has three adopted pets: Cinnamon, a teacup Yorkshire terrier; Fiona, a cat named after her character on Shameless; and Pepper, a terrier-Havanese mix (pictured with Rossum, above). "When I met Pepper, she was totally shaved because her fur had been so matted from living on the street," says Rossum. "But as soon as I picked up this adorable mess of an animal, we had a connection." Had it not been for Rossum and her passionate advocacy for the no-kill movement, these three pets might have been among the millions of animals euthanized annually by shelters in the United States. Now Rossum has partnered with the Best Friends Animal Society's Save Them All campaign to encourage adoption. "Not only does adopting give a pet a lifelong home," she says, "but it opens up a space in a sanctuary so that another animal can be rescued off the streets."

Clearly you're an animal person. Did you grow up with cats and dogs? Yes, but the menagerie I grew up with also included parakeets, fish, snails, and rabbits. What is the key to Save Them All's success? We don't focus exclusively on the big picture, of one day making this country a no-kill environment. We work incrementally and personally. What does a success story look like for you? I met a Chihuahua named Tinker Bell who had a walking disability and neurological damage. When she arrived at the sanctuary, she could only go in circles. Her trainer at Best Friends taught her how to walk normally and found her a forever home in New Jersey.

The logic behind putting animals down is that there just aren't enough homes for them. Why do you think people might be hesitant to adopt? People often assume that shelter animals will be aggressive or difficult to train. I understand why: When you see them in the shelter, they usually don't look happy or playful. But how would you feel if you were stuck in there? These animals come to life when you bring them into

The key to figure flattery for any woman is confidence. If you have that, everything else will follow naturally. When I first designed the wrap dress in 1974, I wanted something that would accent women's curves, not hide them. It was all about the silk jersey fabric, which I envisioned moving with the body like a second skin. Whether you are short, tall, curvy, or thin, the most important thing is to love yourself. Go for it! dame von Turdenberg

I'm a DD cup with a small waist and slim hips, so I have a hard time finding clothes that fit. What styles should I focus on?

—KRISTEN B., ATLANTA

A shirtdress will work well since it gives you the room you need at the top, and you can add a belt to highlight your natural waist. Don't forget to select a shoe with a high heel to make your legs appear long.

Since I'm plus size it's difficult to shop for chic formal wear. Do you have any suggestions? —ELIZABETH L., NASHVILLE

A chiffon tunic in a bold print, like the DVF Layla style, is a playful piece for nighttime. This fabric always feels glamorous because it's flowing and feminine—just right for after dark. For accessories, all you need are metallic sandals and gold baubles.

> I love midiskirts, but I'm short and petite. Any tips on how I can pull off this trend? -ALESSANDRA B., NEW YORK

Choose one with a high waist and tuck your top into it. This will automatically elongate your midesection. Complete the look with refined pumps or heeled, knee-high boots.

I'm over 5 foot 10, so it's a struggle to buy pants that are the right length. Which designers cater to tall girls?

-KARLIE M., AUSTIN, TEXAS

European designers like me tend to cut pants long rather than short. I find that brands such as Zara and Topshop do the same.

thick, hazy heat engulfs New York's East Village, turning the corners fragrant and the tarmac steaming. But inside the Bowery Hotel, a fire crackles, the air is cool, and the armchairs are soft. Zachary Quinto, 38, an actor for whom the term "best known" is increasingly irrelevant after a series of memorable roles, from the villainous Sylar in the cult-favorite television series Heroes to Mr. Spock in the Star Trek reboot and John Smith in the shoot 'em up Hitman: Agent 47 (out August 21), orders a glass of rosé. "It's 5 o'clock somewhere," he says, loosening the collar of his Alex Mill chambray shirt. But Quinto, who calls his off-duty style "comfortable and understated," needn't worry. For a few weeks, at least, he's enjoying time off, letting his scruff grow, peddling around the East Village with his boyfriend, model Miles McMillan, and, surprisingly, perfecting his banjo technique. Anyway, he's right. It's happy hour somewhere. Here, in fact.

Between blockbusters, cameos on shows like Girls, roles on series like American Horror Story, and theater, you appear to work nonstop. Is it strange to have a bit of free time? I used to prefer to be busy. Just after I finished a long run of Tennessee Williams's The Glass Menagerie on Broadway this past February, I was really hungry for work. Hitman: Agent 47, a film based on a video game, came up and I dove into it. I literally closed the play on a Sunday, flew to Berlin on Monday, and started shooting on Wednesday. In retrospect, I am recognizing the value and need for space and time between experiences.

Since then, you've filmed Oliver Stone's biopic Snowden, which comes out at the end of the year, right? That's true. It was such a timely story I couldn't say no. Joe Gordon-Levitt plays Ed Snowden, and I play Guardian journalist Glenn Greenwald. We filmed in the same Hong Kong hotel where it all went down. It was a profound experience. Look, they even shaved my hairline and trimmed my eyebrows, which feels really weird now.

You make sacrifices for your art. [Both laugh] Yeah, so true.

Many of your characters seem to have a strong moral compass, whether it is Spock or Greenwald. Are you drawn to rectitude? The main criterion I have when considering a project is whether the role has layers of complexity and dynamics beyond what meets the eye. Can I get in there and play against expectation a little bit? So though I like the moral aspect, I've also played some pretty despicable parts too, like Dr. Thredson on American Horror Story. That guy is

How are you filling your days now? I'm settling into a normal East Village routine. I take my two terriers for a walk in the morning, get a coffee, ride my bike. There's no shortage of amazing restaurants here.

Do you cook? My boyfriend, Miles, is a much better cook than I am. I'm usually the dish doer ... or the banjo player.

Come again? I've been playing banjo for two and half years. I grew up loving Steve Martin movies. I didn't realize he was one of the best banjo players in the country. He is a big reason why I started. I actually ran into him at a bar recently. I approached him and said, "I want you to know I've picked up the banjo because of you."

What did he say? He was nice. He said, "Keep playing. Play every day." And I do.

You've pulled off some advanced menswear, like at 2013's Met Ball when you sported a blue mohawk and a Vivienne Westwood tux. Who are your style icons? Yves St. Laurent and my dad. He died when I was young [shows me a picture on his phone of his father as a young man playing guitar], but he was awesome. You've also been very active in the marriage-equality movement. Since that finish line is in sight, will you move on to another cause? The battle for acceptance, against bigoted hatred, is not yet over. That said, I do think the gay-rights movement is evolving into a transgenderequality movement.

Are you a fan of the Kardashians? If you had asked me that a few months ago, I would have been dismissive. But I have a lot of admiration for Caitlyn Jenner. And to the extent the family is reflective of it-I can't believe I'm saying this—I have more of an appreciation.

Quinto

Great moments in tweezing

As any Heroes fan knows, Quinto's character boasted a heart of pure evil and eyebrows of wild charm.

MR. SPOCK It took Star Trek's makeup man David Anderson 40 to 50 minutes to prepare each of Quinto's artful brows.

DR. THREDSON As a diabolical psychiatrist on American Horror Story, Quinto has his brows unsettlingly obscured by horn-rims.

ALL ABOUT... Giorgio Armani

The designer whose name is sacred to the red carpet's best dressed celebrates his label's 40th anniversary with a runway retrospective and a Milan gallery dedicated to his craft. We celebrate by bringing you his 40 most indelible moments yet. Who needs candles when you've got stars?

BY ERIC WILSON

the BIG 4-OH!

"Elegance," says Sophia Loren, when asked to describe Giorgio Armani's designs in one word. It's no wonder so many women trust him to deliver the perfect dress. Adds Hilary Swank, "He makes me feel like I do in all of his dresses: confident."

GIORGIO ARMANI ON THE RECORD

While touring his new exhibition space in Milan, the designer, 81, reflects on four decades of shaping the way women—famous or not—dress.

Q How did you know so long ago that the red carpet would become so big?

A When I was growing up, we had just finished with war. It was a hard time for us, so seeing what was happening in Hollywood, I knew I wanted to be a part of that. To catch a little of that stardust is such a great thing.

Q You've dressed so many stars that people used to call the Academy Awards the Armani Awards. Now that there's more competition, how do you stay on top?

A We used to invent our job day by day, but now a huge industry has grown around celebrities and how they dress. However, the way I work is still the same. I try to build a deep dialogue with the celebrities I dress. I always thought it important to maintain a direct, personal relationship, and I think people appreciate some human contact.

Q What makes a great red-carpet dress? A I think that a look is perfect when you wear clothes that reflect your personality and make you feel comfortable. On the other hand, I think excess, on the red carpet and off, is never elegant.

Q Seeing your work in the gallery, did you ever think all this was possible?

A This job makes me dream little. I have to keep my feet on the ground. It's about reality. Recently, a journalist told me, "Mr. Armani, you are very successful, but there are also people who criticize you and say you're a bit boring." This exhibition shows everybody that I have been creative as well in my career.

Q How has fashion changed in that time?

A The body has changed for the better, but I'm not sure that fashion has gotten better for women. It has been reduced to the essentials—a legging, a leather jacket, a pair of sneakers. Before, women dressed up for the evening, and for the day. Now it's a bit simple. That is something that needs to change. Otherwise, all of this work wouldn't make sense.

REVIVAL OF THE FITTEST

For his company's latest milestone, Armani is introducing a collection of his greatest hits revisited for today. "In recent times fashion has taken a flashy, extravagant turn, forgetting the needs of everyday women who work and want to dress gracefully," he says. He calls his designs the New Normal because they are "so accurately designed that they are always fashionable."

As Clean As a Bag Can Be

Armani created a piece that achieves just the right degree of simplicity without being a snooze. Le Sac 11 (named for his birthdate and Milan street address) is "a timeless design with the allure of a classic that seems to have always been in the wardrobe," he says.

Simple micellar water is especially designed to give a gentle yet effective cleanse. Its clever micelles actively work together to attract make-up, lift up impurities, leaving skin thoroughly cleansed, refreshed and hydrated.

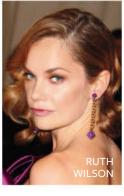

Perfect symmetry has long been the focus of conventional ideas about beauty. But as stylist Ryan Trygstad proves, sometimes a little imbalance can be straight-up stunning. To showcase Old Hollywood waves (and maybe one of your striking new danglers), build in volume with a plumping spray before making a deep side part and blow-drying. Curl hair, then roll it up in back; pin to the base of your scalp, allowing long layers to fall next to one side of your face. Tuck a bloom in back for a summery twist.

From flushed cheeks to rosebud lips and ultrachic pullbacks, these quick moves will instantly take your look up a notch. Or two. BY KATHLEEN FIFIELD

wrap your PONY

So not cute and sweet was exactly the point of the runway's low pullbacks cinched with leather. But while they look decidedly cool, some heat and blow-dry hustle is required to pull them off. For his evening version at Carolina Herrera, stylist Orlando Pita achieved total sleekness with a dryer before pulling strands face-lifting tight and wrapping the upper quarter of the tail with leather laces. At Derek Lam, damp hair coated in mousse was similarly blown straight on top while strands falling below the chin were left to airdry for a slightly rough texture.

sport ski-slope

A generous helping of low-lying blush created the runway's prettiest aprèsski flush (blood-pumping cardio and lift ticket not included). But while you want impact with a warm shade, shoot for diffused over a heavy-handed application, says makeup artist Dick Page, who blended in a rosy cream and then topped with bronze powder for a convincing finish at Michael Kors. Easier? Use a fluffy brush and apply rose or bronze powder to the area just below the apples of your cheeks. Michael Kors Bronze Powder in Flush and Glow, $50 each; macys.com.

Shelve those bubble-gum dreams! Standout pouts blossomed in everything from bright rose to velvety eggplant with lots of cherry and raisin in between. line your LOWER LIDS

Just going bottom-heavy on the liner (or the crystals!) gives off a "worn-in Bohemian rocker" vibe, as makeup pro Sarah Lucero proved with her work at Rebecca Minkoff. Coat the upper and lower lashes with mascara, then line waterlines with a flesh-toned pencil. Next, take black liner just to the bottom, going for a thick line that doesn't quite reach either corner. Combine the gutsy underscore with matte skin, a little contouring under the cheekbones, and neutral lips.

do the new TWIST
At shows like Chanel, brill

At shows like Chanel, brilliant styling wrung the bourgeois out of the classic Belle de Jour updo, making the twist as effortlessly pretty as its slightly simpler cousin, the chignon. Some grip is essential, so work with a thickening spray to start. As you tuck strands into a twist, let wisps fall where they will. You can add a hair accessory, but don't be too precise about placement. In front, slip on a black fabric band at the hairline to complete the chic.

beef up your BROWS

Full arches are still trending, but brushing hairs straight up is equally key for fall's runway brows. To get the look at Isabel Marant, makeup artist Lisa Butler recommends using a dry spoolie to coax hairs up and outward. Then, with a powder in a shade that's just lighter than your own brows, draw a straight line through the middle of each brow and blend. From there, fill in any sparse spots with a sharp eyebrow pencil, and sweep on a tinted gel to set. Eyeko Brow Gel, $24; eyeko.com.

BEAUTY TALK Elizabeth Olsen

Don't let the lush lashes and full brows fool you. When it comes to beauty, this Olsen sister may just be as low-key as it gets

You've described yourself as having a very masculine sense of style. Really? I pride myself on being able to get ready in 15 minutes, and that's including a shower. I'm my dad's child, and it's just the way we were raised. You shower, you get dressed quickly, and you leave. I've only recently started to have fun with hair and makeup. So you didn't experiment much as a teen? Not at all. I looked up to my sisters [Mary-Kate and Ashley], and they've always been incredibly natural. So that's what I picked up. To this day I feel like a child beauty pageant contestant when I wear too much makeup. The smallest amount of eyeliner completely ages me. I have to be careful. What about hair? I know a lot of women who envy those perfectly effortless waves you and your sisters rock. Well, their hair actually dries like that! I wish mine did, but I have to use a curling iron to style it that way. I'm really lazy with my hair—it's so thick. It takes some effort. You certainly take risks in the hair color department. What's been your favorite color? Ombré is my jam. I also love brunet. I'm so used to being a blonde that something about brunet hair feels sexy to me. I'm kind of a plain Jane type, so it makes me feel exotic. What's the one beauty trend you'd probably never try? I'm not interested in nail art. I played volleyball growing up, and my mother hates chipped nails—she doesn't think it's becoming. So by default I never wear polish. But funnily enough, my manager gave me a gift certificate for a mani-pedi for my birthday. Guess he thinks I need one! —KAHLANA BARFIELD >

GETTING to the ROOT of THINGS
"I'm naturally a dirty blonde, and my hair color usually only changes based on my jobs," says Olsen. Considering she's been sunny blond, brunet, ombré, and everything in between, it's safe to say the girl has no problem finding work.

"This was one of the only times I colored my hair for fun. It's actually the color I want my hair to be now. I'm happy we're having this conversation."

"My hair was really blond from filming Godzilla, and I hadn't had it dyed in, like, six months. Harry Josh always likes to style my hair stick straight when it's long."

2014

"This ombré was my favorite, and I was so upset when I had to dve it back. Lorri Goddard did it. She knows I'm conservative, so she tried to make it natural."

2015

"This was for I Saw the Light. My hair needed to be cut in lots of layers for the film, so Mark Townsend went and butchered it on the set!"

Can You Tone That Tummy? ABS-OLUTELY!

If "flat" and "taut" aren't the first words you'd use to describe your midsection, these tips from doctors, nutritionists, and trainers will help you firm up and de-flab your middle

Set up a core program to prep for the coming decades, when a six-pack won't be so easy to achieve, says Dr. Jamé Heskett, founder of N.Y.C. Wellpath. Include strengthening exercises like crunches and planks to build muscle and, when your middle is exposed to the sun, SPF to protect skin-firming collagen. Also consider a daily probiotic. Boosting good bacteria in your gut can speed digestion to prevent weight gain and bloat, says nutritionist Christine Avanti.

San Diego dermatologist Melanie Palm sees some "lax muscular tone" in patients now (sedentary job plus a pregnancy or two, anyone?), as well as textural changes on the skin's surface. Continue with your crunches, and grab the collagen-boosting retinol you use on your face to apply to your midriff two to three times weekly. BYE-BYE, BLOAT

Whether you're suffering from water weight or carb overload, nutritionists say that working three key foods into your diet can help you deflate faster.

SPIKE YOUR WATER

Squeeze a quarter of a lemon into a cup of water and you've got a super-simple way to ward off bulges, says Avanti. Recent studies show that incorporating this daily dose of vitamin C into your diet can lower your chances of developing abdominal fat.

ADD SOME AVOCADO

Before you hit pulse on your Vitamix, toss an avocado into your morning smoothie, suggests Avanti. A study by the American Diabetic Association finds that foods with monounsaturated fatty acids can reduce belly fat. One ounce of dark chocolate, 16 almonds, or 10 olives can deliver the same benefit.

SNACK ON ASPARAGUS

Use the natural diuretic properties of this veggie to help you flush away excess water weight and bloat, says N.Y.C. nutritionist Brooke Alpert. A healthy serving of about 12 stalks does the trick, and the effect should be noticeable in about one or two hours, she says.

How can I air-dry my hair so it looks cute once it's set?

If you'd asked us a few months A ago, we'd have told you to use a little beach spray and hope for the best. Now we can suggest a new breed of product: the air-dry styler, which gives hair just enough polish to look cared for if not too "done." Using non-heat-activated polymers, these foams and creams provide hold without crunchiness while also taming frizz. To define (or coax) soft waves, add a quarter-size dollop of this John Frieda foam to damp hair. For a more disheveled effect, work in a palmful of Bumble and Bumble's cream styler and periodically tousle hair as it dries. If it's a smooth look you're after, coat strands with Shu Uemura's spray to get a sleek, shiny finish.

MINNIE DRIVER ASKS INSTYLE ...

What's better for grooming brows—tweezing or waxing?

You'll typically want to pass on the second option, says New Haven, Conn., dermatologist Mona Gohara. There's just too much room for burns and errors when ripping strips of hair from the delicate area around your eyes, she says. The best results come down to shaping skills (yours or a pros). L.A. brow expert Kristie Streicher relies on sharp tweezers and a light touch to clean up arches, preferring the youthful vibe that full, sprouty brows give the face. To guard against irritation, Dr. Gohara says to stop using any sort of Retin-A or alpha hydroxy acid for one week pre- and post-grooming. Before tweezing, wash your face with warm water and a mild, pH-neutral cleanser "to open the follicles so hair comes out more easily," she says. Soothe after tweezing with a calming salve.

STIMULATE YOUR SENSES

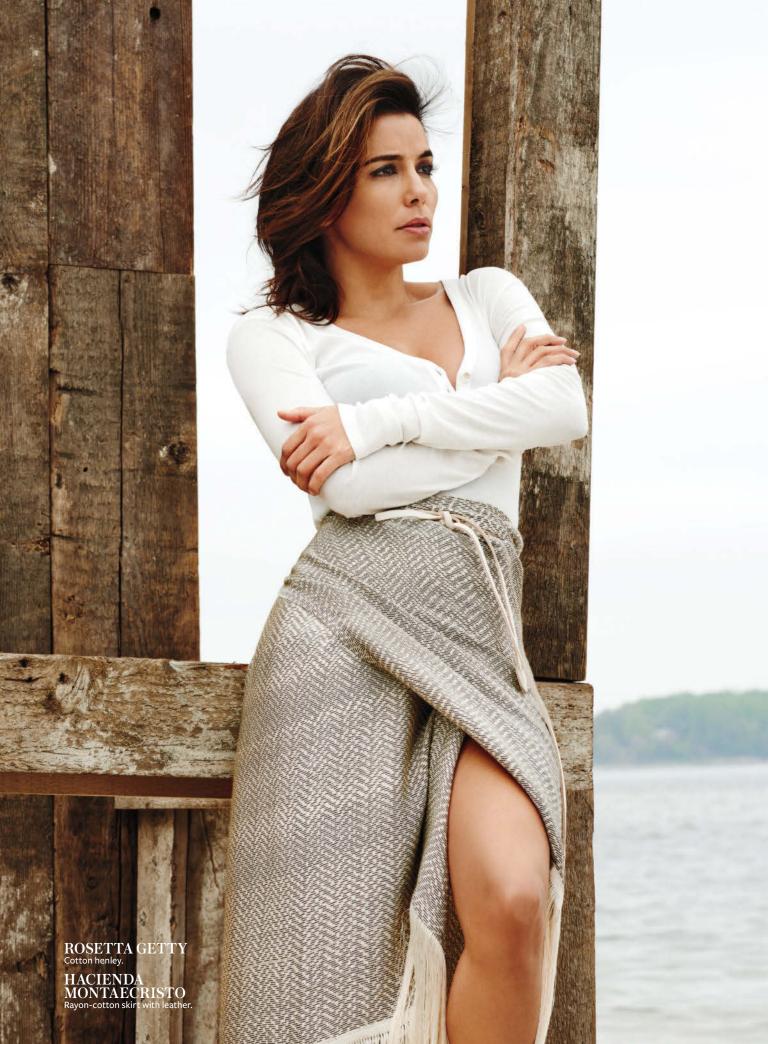

into the deep

On the cusp of a major comeback with her hilarious new TV show sending up Latin soaps, Eva Longoria opens up about coming into her own as a political advocate, the challenges (and thrills) of producing, and the quiet domestic bliss she's found

by LIZZIE WIDDICOMBE $photographed\ by$ GIAMPAOLO SGURA $styled\ by$ MELISSA RUBINI

Eva Longoria's photo shoot isn't going so well. She's on a soundstage under bright lights, vamping for the camera in a red gown, blingy jewels, and a giant hairpiece. Her handsome male co-star is at her side. A wind machine blows, and a director yells, "Action," guys!" But the elements don't seem to jell. The fake wind is too strong. Longoria's dress billows, and her hair flies awkwardly into her face. She and her co-star can't seem to get along. He leans seductively into the spotlight. She hip-checks him. He tries to put an arm around her. She bats his hand away.

As it turns out, everything is going according to plan. Because at this moment, Longoria isn't Eva Longoria, American television star and producer. She's Ana Sofia, the vain, insecure, but ultimately lovable Latina diva at the center of Hot & Bothered. Longoria's new show, which will premiere next year on NBC. It's been three years since Longoria appeared onscreen playing ex-model Gabrielle Solis on Desperate Housewives, and she's back with a bang. Like 30 Rock, Hot & Bothered is a behind-the-scenes look at the TV business, with its ego clashes and bad behavior, but this is set in the over-the-top world of telenovelas, or Latin soaps. This photo shoot for NBC's promotional spots offers a taste of the show's premise: Ana Sofia's life gets complicated when her ex-husband-played by Jencarlos Canela, a real-life Telemundo soap star and pop heartthrob—is cast as her love interest.

Hot & Bothered is, in Longoria's words, "a big, fat comedy," and she and Canela have plenty of screwball chemistry. As the cameras roll, they push each other and tussle for the spotlight.

"Perfect!" the director shouts.

Canela grabs Longoria's waist, and she jabs him in the ribs with an elbow, all while batting her eyelashes. "That's it!" the director says. "And then, Eva, exit—leave him! Good-bye!" Longoria stomps off.

When the shoot ends, Longoria and Canela have a different dynamic: that of boss and employee. Canela, who is 27, asks Longoria about the next round of promo spots; they will not be appearing in character but as themselves. "Would you like me to change?" he asks.

Longoria studies him. "I think you look very handsome in the suit," she says, smoothing his lapel.

Canela offers to wear the clothes he arrived in-a beige leather jacket, a white T-shirt, jeans, and boots.

Longoria considers. "Can I see them?" she asks. Just then, someone bellows into a walkie-talkie. Longoria shushes him. "Shhh! Please!" She's thinking. She tells Canela to get the jacket. "Bring it over here. Because you look so handsome in the suit, I might want you in the suit."

He says, "Whatever you want, baby!" and scampers off obediently.

Longoria returns to her dressing room. "I'm not being bossy. I'm a producer," she explains, sitting at a makeup station as two assistants transform her from Ana Sofia back into Eva. The teetering heels come off, followed by the fake eyelashes and the hairpiece. "I'm wearing two sets of fake boobs!" Longoria announces, removing the padding. After 15 years in television, she's not shy about changing in public. She whips off the gown too, revealing her petite, curvy body. She struggles with a clingy skirt. "Oops! My ass!"

Her hairdresser says, "That ass has its own zip code." When Longoria is dressed, Canela returns with the jacket. She approves: "Yeah, do that! Thanks, baby."

The last time Longoria was on TV for Desperate Housewives, things were simpler. For eight seasons of the show, her job was straightforward. "I rolled out of bed, went to set, said my lines, and went back home."

Hot & Bothered is a different story. Longoria came up with the idea for the show herself. She was inspired by the Latin soaps her parents and friends watched during her Texas childhood. She pitched it to writers, recruited the showrunners (Cougar Town's Chrissy Pietrosh and Jessica Goldstein), and spent three years developing it. "We're arcing out the series now," she says. She also had a heavy hand in other details: "Casting. Promos. Marketing."

This suits Longoria fine. Over the past few years, she's developed a busy career as a producer—she executiveproduced the successful Lifetime series Devious Maids as well as a slew of documentaries, including some shorts for ESPN dealing with racism and sexism off the field. "It's a lot of fun," she says. In fact, she muses, being the boss might be a more natural fit for her. "Everyone goes, 'Oh, she's an actor turned director, and I'm like, 'No, I was always a director and a producer who happened to become an actor." The business side appeals to her for a simple reason: "I'm a control freak."

The world of telenovelas, with its elaborate sets and overblown acting, provides plenty of comic material. Longoria and her writing staff traveled to Miami, where the show takes place, to spend time observing real Latin soaps. They heard industry legends: the star who had a wall built to separate herself from her ex-husband, also a cast member, and the actress who would randomly slap people in scenes without telling them. (Longoria also has a Salvadoran friend named Bonnie, an executive assistant at Warner Bros. and a telenovela junkie, who acts as an unofficial consultant.)

Longoria emphasizes that the show is "honoring" the genre, not mocking it. She wants to show "the universal

GIVE BACK "The fate of this country is more important than my acting career," says Longoria, whose many charitable initiatives include Eva's Heroes, a San Antonio-based organization for teens and young adults with special needs. Right now she's focused on helping young Latina women get access to the STEM fields: science, technology, engineering, and math.

LEARNING Long hours on set didn't stop Longoria from earning a master's in Chicano studies from Cal State, Northridge. "I'm more thirsty for knowledge now than I was at 18," she says.

STAY ROOTED Longoria wore a gown from Latin American designer Gabriela Cadena to the Cannes Film Festival this year. "I have a platform, and I want to use it strategically.

themes of family and loyalty and divorce and love and heartbreak and child-rearing." But that doesn't mean she won't have fun. At one point in the new show, "I pick up a trash can and hurl it over my head, Hulk Hoganstyle. That never happened on the set of Housewives."

Canela returns to the dressing room in his leather jacket. Longoria met him through Amaury Nolasco, another star of Hot & Bothered. "We'd been searching for a handsome, hot, funny Hispanic guy who was fluent in Spanish and English, who could act, was physical, everything." While he's a huge star in the Latino community, Canela is making his first foray into Hollywood with this show. "I've learned so much from her," he says admiringly of Longoria.

It could be argued that Longoria has two different public personas. In the English-speaking world, she's best known for her role on Desperate Housewives and her marriage to NBA star Tony Parker. But in the Spanish-speaking world, Longoria is better known for her work off camera, as a political advocate and a humanitarian. "She's one of our icons," Canela says.

Longoria has long been involved in charity and politics. Through the Eva Longoria Foundation, she supports the Padres Contra el Cáncer and Eva's Heroes, a San Antonio organization for teens and young adults with intellectual special needs (her older sister Elizabeth was born with special needs). When Desperate Housewives ended in 2012, she says, "I didn't want to work. You get tired." Instead, she threw herself into advocacy: Longoria stumped for Obama (she was a co-chair of his 2012 reelection campaign), testified before Congress on behalf of Latina business owners, and campaigned for immigration reform and against Arizona's show-me-your-papers law, S.B. 1070. Her endorsement is a coveted prize for politicians seeking the Latino vote. (As for 2016, "it's no secret I'm a big Hillary fan," she says. But she'll wait until after the primaries to jump into the fray.)

Longoria is genuinely interested in politics, but more than anything, she wants to set an example by speaking out. On a dime, she switches into advocate mode, talking about the importance of political engagement for Latinos: "We're the fastest-growing demographic in the United States, but I don't want us to just be a large group. We have to be influential. We have to stand for something."

Confident as she sounds, Longoria says that, intellectually, she was a late bloomer. She grew up in a Mexican-American family in Corpus Christi, Texas, the youngest of four daughters. While she comes from what she calls an "academic family"—her mother, one of her sisters, and her aunts are teachers-Eva was an indifferent student. She got a degree in kinesiology from Texas A&M. (Sports are another obsession, especially the NFL.) "I wanted to be a sports trainer for the Dallas Cowboys." She became a pageant queen by accident: "I just needed the money." She entered her first beauty pageant because her Pell grant had been discontinued and the prize involved free textbooks. She was aiming for fifth place, but she won.

"I overshot," Longoria says. She eventually won the title of Miss Corpus Christi, which came with a trip to Hollywood. She stayed.

Go to instyle.com/ Though she doesn't like to dwell on her beauty-queen past, Longoria, who has been a spokeswoman for L'Oréal Paris since 2005, clearly knows her way around a smoky eye-and a set of falsies. "I've been using individual false lashes since my pageant days," she told us in 2012. Her best tip? "Squeeze the glue out and let it dry for a minute before applying lashes. If you put them in the glue right away, they slide like crazy."

Having mastered the art of looking gorgeous at an early age, Longoria turned her attention to more meaty challenges during her Desperate Housewives years, joining the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, a civil rights group. "Somebody gave me the book Occupied America, by Rodolpho Acuña, and I read it, and it was amazing. And then from there I said, 'I'm going to read another book,' and 'I'm going to take one class because I want to know more.' I ended up taking many more classes. You come to a point where you must enroll, so I did." In 2013, after years of studying at night following days on set, Longoria got a master's degree in Chicano studies from California State University, Northridge.

After the tabloid frenzy over her divorce from Parker in 2010, Longoria's personal life has quieted down. She's currently dating the Televisa media executive José Antonio Bastón. "I'm in a happy place in my life, so it's easy to be open and in love," she has said of the relationship. The actress, who has published a cookbook and recently launched a collection of throw pillows, bedding sets, and window treatments at JCPenney, says, "People don't realize how domestic I am." When she first moved to L.A., "I had this sh— apartment, and my aunt Elsa would come over. She'd get so mad if I didn't have curtains or nice pillows. I couldn't afford them, so she was like, 'Then you need to make them.' So I would go to the fabric store and get discount fabric, and I would sew my own throw pillows."

Longoria has no plans to scale back her extracurricular activities while Hot & Bothered is on the air. "I already have almost all of my hiatus weeks filled."

In the long run, she says, "my dream is still producing and directing." Asked for career role models, she names Jerry Bruckheimer and Brian Grazer. In a way, such a career is not incompatible with her advocacy, especially since Hollywood has been doing some soul searching lately about its lack of diversity behind the scenes. "I love that I'm going to be able to open doors," Longoria says. She describes a visit she received on the set of Hot & Bothered from a friend, the producer Shaun Cassidy. "Everyone was running around-this crew of 250 people." Actors and prop people were asking her questions. "Shaun looked at me and said, 'You had an idea, and now all these people have a job." She smiles. "I love that." ■

EN ROUTE

Brie Larson, smiling in a silk bomber jacket embroidered with dragons, is eating a vegan casserole in a West Hollywood diner on a brief layover in her hometown. Then it's off to New York, London, and finally Mumbai. "I'm working on a musical about genetically modified rice that's going to destroy the world," she says. As for the jacket, it's a souvenir from "10 years ago, when I was trying to be a pop star." She laughs, her warm brown eyes sparkling. Though she's been acting for 18 of her 25 years, Larson maintains an appealing freshness. "I'm not in this job because I want stuff," she says. "I want freedom and the experiences that come with it." So far that's been a line of zeitgeisty films, from the high school weepy The Spectacular Now to the indie darling Short Term 12. Next, she stars as Amy Schumer's more stable younger sister in the Judd Apatow-directed Trainwreck, followed by Room, a drama in which she plays a captive mother. "I had my therapist already lined up for that," she says. Trainwreck was a lighter affair: "Judd and Amy took me to a bunch of comedy clubs in New York. I had to admit that comedy is the superior medium. They were like, "We know!"

Dressed in a faded mechanic's jumpsuit. Alicia Vikander is white-knuckling a tiny stick-shift car through the dusky back alleys of Rome. As a menacing Russian spy (played by Armie Hammer) careens up beside her, she swerves, catapulting the car into the narrow space between two buildings.

When you watch the opening scene of Guy Ritchie's stylish adaptation of the '60s cult TV show The Man from U.N.C.L.E. (out August 14), it's hard to believe that just a few months before filming, its 26-year-old star had never driven a car. "When I auditioned, I didn't tell them I didn't have a license," says Vikander, swallowing a faint smirk as she takes a sip of green tea at New York's Crosby Street Hotel. The Swedish-born actress, who has lived in London for the past four years, speaks in a low, almost hypnotic voice that sounds slightly British. "My friends came to the set while we were shooting the car-chase scene and just laughed, but it was so fun."

Laughing in the face of fear is nothing new for the self-possessed actress and dancer. who performed in her first play at the age of 7 in front of a live audience of about 1.500 and moved-by herself—to Stockholm when she was 15 to attend the Royal Swedish Ballet school. After landing a few acting roles in Sweden, Vikander gained international attention in 2012's Anna Karenina and even more as a sexy robot in this year's Ex Machina. "When I got the Karenina role, I was living in London with the girls from Icona Pop-they're my best friends from Sweden," she says. "We didn't have any money, so we lived in the most dirty little house. We shared beds and just had a pile of clothes in the middle of the room that we also shared."

Vikander, a new face of Louis Vuitton, is nattily dressed for our interview in a tweed Vuitton blazer, Acne Studios skinny jeans, and Vuitton sandals. "These actually look like the sandals I wore in the movie," she says, lifting a jewelencrusted slide into the air. The actress loved all the chic late-'60s-inspired fashion in U.N.C.L.E., but she says with a sly smile, "My favorite outfit was the boilersuit."

STUFFED HEIRLOOM TOMATOES

WITH COUSCOUS, PEAS, CHANTERELLE MUSHROOMS, CUCUMBERS, AND TZATZIKI

In New Orleans, rising chef and recent James Beard Award winner Alon Shaya works both sides of the Mediterranean, serving classic Italian food at Domenica and Pizza Domenica, and modern Israeli cuisine at Shaya. His stuffed tomatoes are "like a beautiful salad but done in an even more impressive way," he says. Make the couscous mixture a day ahead, but scoop out tomatoes at the last moment, saving the insides in a freezer bag to make pasta sauce or chilled tomato soup.

SERVES 4TOTAL TIME 1 hour, 15 minutes

couscous

- 1 cup Israeli couscous
- 1 tbsp kosher salt
- 1 tsp extra-virgin olive oil

VEGETABLES

- ½ cup baby green peas
- 1 tbsp vegetable oil
- 2 cups chanterelle mushrooms (about 4 oz.)
- 4 large ripe heirloom tomatoes
- ½ tsp kosher salt

TZATZIKI

½ cup plain yogurt (not Greek)

LIFE etc.

- cup finely diced cucumber
- ½ cup finely chopped dill, plus more for garnish
- 1 tbsp finely chopped mint
- 1 tbsp fresh lemon juice
- 1 tbsp extra-virgin olive oil
- 1/4 tsp ground dill seed
- 1 tsp kosher salt
- ½ tsp freshly ground black pepper

For the couscous: In a small saucepan, bring 4 cups water to a boil over high heat. Stir in couscous and salt. Reduce heat to moderate; cook until just tender, about 8 minutes. Drain and rinse under cold water; drain well. Transfer couscous to a medium bowl; stir in olive oil and let cool. For the vegetables: 1 In a small saucepan, bring ½ cup water to a boil over high heat. Add peas, cover, and reduce heat to low. Cook until tender and bright, about 4 minutes. Drain peas and add to couscous. 2 In a medium skillet, heat vegetable oil. Add mushrooms; cook over moderately high heat until golden brown and softened, about 8 minutes. Add mushrooms to couscous and peas. 3 Cut the top ½ inch off the tomatoes; scoop out centers. Season insides with salt; set aside. For the tzatziki: In a large bowl, combine yogurt, cucumber, dill, mint, lemon juice, olive oil, and dill seed. Add salt and pepper; stir to combine. To assemble: 1 Fold couscous, peas, and mushrooms into tzatziki. 2 Spoon couscous tzatziki into each tomato. Garnish with dill and serve.

SERVES 4 TOTAL TIME 20 minutes

Meet your new secret weapon for effortless summer cooking. "You can spoon this amazing mixture over tomatoes, pasta, fish, or meat," says Frank Castronovo, who along with Frank Falcinelli helms N.Y.C.'s joyfully old-school Italian hot spots Frankies Spuntino, Frankies 457, and Frankies 570. Salty with capers and green olives and sprinkled with crushed red pepper, the topping is equally delicious whether served fresh or left overnight to marinate.

- ½ cup extra-virgin olive oil
- 1/4 cup pitted Castelvetrano olives, halved
- 2 tbsp brined capers, rinsed
- ½ cup finely chopped onion
- 1/4 cup loosely packed small basil leaves
- ½ cup loosely packed flat-leaf parsley leaves
- ½ tsp crushed red pepper Sea salt
- 3 heirloom tomatoes (about 2 pounds), sliced thick

1 In a bowl, combine olive oil, olives, capers, onion, basil, parsley, and crushed red pepper. Season with ¼ tsp sea salt and toss.
2 Arrange tomato slices on a platter; season with salt. Spoon olive topping over tomatoes and serve.

WITH TOASTED GARLIC, CHERRY TOMATOES, AND RICOTTA SALATA

"Cherry tomatoes in the summertime are so juicy and sweet, you almost don't have to do anything to them," says N.Y.C. superchef Andrew Carmellini, known for his celebrated fleet of sumptuous and season-inspired restaurants, including pasta-centric Bar Primi. Tossed with lemon zest ("it cuts through the creaminess of the butter and cheese perfectly") and only slightly cooked-down tomatoes, his dazzlingly fresh and simple spaghetti is "the perfect dish to serve outside with a glass of rosé." For an even more delicate version, make it with the skinnier spaghettini noodle, and be careful not to overcook it.

SERVES 4 TOTAL TIME 30 minutes

- 3/4 lb. dried spaghetti
- 1 tbsp unsalted butter
- 1/3 cup extra-virgin olive oil
- 4 garlic cloves, thinly sliced Salt
- 3 cups cherry tomatoes, halved
- 1/3 cup chopped parsley
- 1/3 cup chopped basil
- 1/4 cup freshly grated Parmesan
- ½ tsp crushed red pepper
- 2 tbsp fresh lemon juice Pepper
- 4 oz. ricotta salata, shaved

1 In a large pot of salted boiling water, cook the pasta until just al dente, about 7 minutes. Drain well, reserving 1 cup of the water to use later. 2 Meanwhile, in a large saucepan, melt butter in olive oil over moderately low heat. Add garlic and ½ teaspoon salt; reduce heat to low and cook, stirring frequently, until garlic is softened, 3–4 minutes (do not brown). Remove from heat. 3 Add pasta to garlic oil; toss to coat over moderately low heat. Add cherry tomatoes, parsley, basil, Parmesan, and crushed red pepper; toss quickly to combine and heat through, about 30 seconds. If pasta looks dry, add some of the reserved pasta water. Remove from heat and add lemon juice. Toss well and season with salt and pepper. 4 Transfer to a large serving dish or individual bowls; top with ricotta salata.

GWYNETH PALTROW

Long before she became a lifestyle guru, the Oscar winner welcomed us to the sprawling ranch in Toledo, Spain, where she once lived as a foreign-exchange student

NOVEMBER 2003

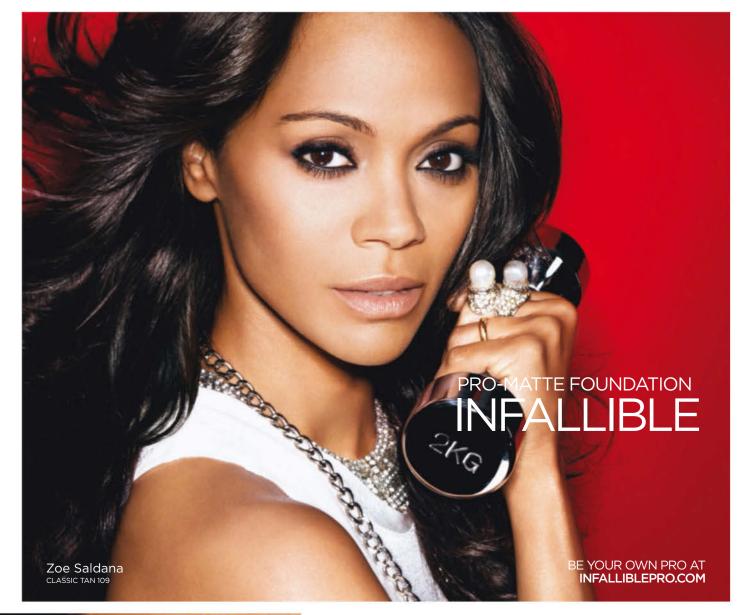

"I come here four times a year," said Paltrow, as she showed us her favorite hideaway for our "She Reigns in Spain" cover story. "It's the farthest you can get from Hollywood." A born-and-bred city girl, Paltrow happily let her hair down for our cameras while she reconnected with the local Iberian culture she fell in love with. (Five years later she and chef Mario Batali would star in a PBS travelogue and culinary tour of the entire country.) Paltrow reminisced about the family she lived with all those years ago. "They sing, dance, and drink wine, and they love each other," she said. "It's inspiring."
